

Telecommunications [1]

Telecommunications are a basic infrastructure of the current context. The ability to communicate almost any military or political order almost instantaneously has been radical in many historical events of the Contemporary Age the first modern telecommunications system appears during the French Revolution. But in addition, telecommunication nowadays constitutes a social and economic factor of great relevance. Thus, these technologies acquire an importance as their utility in concepts of globalization or the information and knowledge society; which is complemented by the importance of the same in any type of commercial, financial, stock or business activity. The mass media also use telecommunications to share content to the public, which is of great importance when it comes to understanding the concept of mass society.

Links

[1] <https://www.mincom.gob.cu/en/procedures/telecommunications>