On January 10, the new Visual Identity Manual and its Applications of the Ministry of Communications entered into force and was thus presented to all workers of the agency.

The Manual responds to the mission of the agency that is responsible for proposing, and once approved, directing and controlling the State and Government policy for the Single Communications System of the Country, which includes telecommunications, information technology, radiocommunications, postal services, automatic communications systems, radio spectrum management and associated technical and support assurance, ensuring, from peacetime, infrastructure and services for national security and defense.
