

Source:

Source: Institutional Communication Office

At the Ministry of Communications and through a video conference system, the book 100 answers about the Internet in Cuba, by Omar Pérez Salomón was launched

It was edited by the Abril Publishing House and its prologue was written by the professor Melchor Gil Morell.

The Book has a high historical and didactic value. The language used in it is clear, which is something that allows for the understanding of all the subjects that it deals with, said Melchor Gil Morell.

For his part, Omar Pérez Salomón commented that: The book deals with facts that show the access of Cuba to the network of networks.

It reflects the political will of the Cuban government to make progress in that field.

20 answers were devoted to describing the characteristics of the projects and campaigns against Cuba on digital platforms.

To know about the antecedents and the circumstances that characterized the process through which our country gained access to that resource, and also about the political will of our government led by our Commander-In-Chief, Fidel Castro Ruz, to develop and implement that technology as a tool for economic and social development and to spread the truth about our reality. Thanks to the Abril Publishing House, said the Communications Vice Minister, Grisel Reyes León on her Facebook profile.

Omar Pérez Salomón, who is a telecommunications engineer and holds a Masters Degree in Management and Communication, delivered this text, which was published by the Abril Publishing House and portrays the political will of the revolutionary government concerning the expansion of that technological resource to every part of the island amidst the conditions of the blockade imposed by several administrations of the USA.

The author, who is currently an official from the Central Committee of the Cuban Communist Party, is one of the founders of the Cuban Collaborative Encyclopedia EcuRed and a collaborator of the websites of La Pupila Insomne, CubaDebate and the Panorama Mundial newsletter. In his work, he values the possibilities offered by this digital tool focusing on the country's economic development, on the creation of knowledge and culture, and on it as a weapon to disseminate the image of Cuba and its reality.

The launch of the book was attended by the Minister of Communications, Jorge Luis Perdomo Di-Lella, by the Director of the Abril Publishing House, Diana Lío, and by officials from the organization and other territories through the video conference system.

---