History and technology come together to satisfy the interests of the population at the Provincial Computer Science Palace in Santiago de Cuba, a place that has become a national reference and where young people are the protagonists.

Four themed rooms link the history of Cuba to new technologies and manage to convey knowledge in a pleasant way to those who use the services offered at this institution, which is located on the centric Enramadas street from that eastern city.

A virtual tour around iconic places is shown on a 59 inches' screen and all the portrayed content can be downloaded through two tablets that are at the entrance of the Palace, in a lobby that is decorated with phrases from the Commander-In-Chief Fidel Castro.
